An Old Maid's Sacrifice.

"The little plantation had to go then to pay debts, poor father! and there was left only the little home place here for me. I went to teaching music then at the old college—the old college, child, that stood behind the church by the laboratory well before your day-but it warn't long before that burned I remember how I cried the night of the fire, but it was all because of the plane, the poor, battered, tuneless old thing that f had practiced on!"

Surely Miss Letty wiped a tear from her eye this time with the corner of her work. "Well, after the college was gone, ther was no school of any kind in Mt. Leba non fo a long time, and there was nothing for me but sewing. I don't mean to complain, the child, for I've always had plenty to do, and I made up my mind at the start that I would lay by a little every year till I had saved enough to buy a pinoo. It seems a long time to you, child, doesn't it? But God has been very good to me, and I feel sure I shall get the piano some day."

We younger ones could not remember when Miss Letty had not made our "Sunday dresses" for us, and this, I think, most of us accepted as a special favor, youthsafed to us just as we did the sugar plums or teacuke, which we sometimes found in the pocket of a new "Lindzey" frock at its first outing, comfortably stored away there by Miss Letty to belp us over the tedium of Sanday's sermon. I can distinctly recall more than one occasion, when, as I sat in my pew corner discreetly mainching my pocket's treasure trove to the tune of 'Am I a Soldier of the Cross?" I was fired by the martial strains to the strong determination that I would buy a plane gain, her voice sounding scorer above a myself and present it to Miss Letty when I graw up.

Consumed with this devout desire, I got no further in my retrospect when I heard the little front gate creak on its binges, and Miss Letty, who had left the room a moment

"The mortgage—who holds it, 'd. before, returned, bringing Mary Ann Perry

Everybody in the village called her Mary Ann, and we younger ones were no excep-tion, elsewhere than before her very face, whose thin, sharp features, beneath her flapping sunbouner, were the bitt of a peral jest among us.

"bon't you think your fire is mighty brisk for this time o' year, Lettin," said Mary Ann, taking a built-way sent on the Mary Ann, taking a ball way seat on the Letty look quite so determined, though her edge of her chair and faming herself with nands were working nervously edgether.

"I don't know as I thought of it, Mary Ann. Does the room seem close to you?"
asked Letty, rising to lift a window. "Oh, it warn't that I meant," interposed Mary Ann. "I guess I can stand as much beat as anybody, seein' I've been used to good fires all my life. I was only thinking times was mighty hard for so much wood "Well, maybe you are right. Mary Ann," answered Miss Letty, taking her seat and felding her hands on her hap placedly Hard times has been the cry ever since I can remember, but I don't know as they seem to get any harder new. However, father always told me I didn't finve a saving bone in me. As he said-poor fatherwhat I saved at the other." Well, of course you are free to do as you please, Leitia," said Mary Aun; "you are just one to yourself, an' when you are gone, you'll leave none behind to suffer But as for times bein' no barder, whateves are you thinkin' of? Maybe you just sin't had it brought home to you, but there's no tellin' bow soon it may come. As for me, low, I can't be'p f'em feelin' sorry for them as do suffer, even if I'm spared myse'f. which, I thank God, I have been so far. There's Bob Taylor, frinstance. S'pore

Reckon it'll go hard on 'em all, him an' his wife both gittin' niong in years, an' with their big household o' girls, too. Somehow, though, I can't seem to be'p f'om ain't pever got over the way he done you. Letty, goin' off that away, without a word, an' you never hearin' nothin' tell news come that he was married to Lou Abererombie, over there to Arcady. 'Twarn't right o' Rob, an' I for one always said so.'

I think most of you have been too hard on Rob, maybe, Mary Ann," said Miss Letty, gently. "His word was not given to me ever, and he had a right to marry who ie pleased " The words came a little tremuously toward the end, but she finished hand across one corner.

Well, that's as you're a mind to look at it," Mary Ann replied, "Rob was as good as boun' to you, word or no word, an' kep' away more than one man as might ave made you a good husband. You can't e'p f'om knowin' that now, Letty, for all ou say. An' that's why I say it like a judgment sent on Rob. A Project Which Has Been 2000 Years Under Consideration. The Fanfulla of Rome amounces that the project of the draining of the Trasimenian Lake, which has been talked about for more than 2,000 years, will at last become a fact. A syndicate of capitalists has bought up the territory surrounding the lake and the immense undertaking will be started this year. The circumference of the lake, in which there are three small islands, is more than thirty miles; its depth averages nine feet. It is proposed to
